1. INTRODUCTION

UN-HABITAT's Safer Cities Programme commissioned the Huairou Commission to undertake a base-line survey of organizations working on women's safety around the world. Women in Cities International and the Latin American Woman and Habitat Network- HIC were asked by the Huairou Commission to carry-out and lead this global assessment project. This survey is a collaborative partnership between all four agencies. This draft report outlines the preliminary results of the International Women's Safety Survey which was conducted between July and August 2007 in four languages (Spanish, English, French and Portuguese).

The survey is the starting point for the Global Assessment on Women's Safety which has as its objective, the strengthening of links across the world among organizations working on the issues of women's safety and well-being and the reinforcement of the links between UN Habitat Safer Cities Program and the local, regional and national organizations working on anti-violence initiatives.

Women's safety is described here as strategies, practices and policies which aim to reduce gender-based violence (or violence against women) including women's fear of crime.

The building of stronger ties around the world comes about through awareness of the complementarity of different kinds of specific activities. Groups and organizations are often divided by geography, language and focus of activities (for example, health-oriented anti-violence work and housing-related anti-violence work are often not well connected) - what the survey results indicate are the shared goals, shared analysis and also shared sense of successes and lessons learned. This sharing of vision, mission and analysis can provide a base for building stronger networks and more effective action.

This report draws on the database containing the responses of the 163 questionnaires that had been received by August 10, 2007. Considering the very short time period for distributing the questionnaire and receiving replies, the number of questionnaires completed is very encouraging. It is in itself an indication of the importance of this initiative, that so many very busy and largely under- resourced community groups felt it worthwhile to take the time to fill out the questionnaires. Groups and organizations clearly wanted to describe their activities and indicate their contribution to the world-wide efforts around the creation of safer and more inclusive communities for the full diversity of women and girls.

This draft report is intended as a first analysis of the results and, therefore, as a basis for discussion about next steps. These will be outlined in greater detail in the conclusion. Results not only describe vast amounts of local activity, commitment and passion, but also the potential for strengthening the international ties of solidarity, and thereby increasing the effectiveness of the work being done. Answering the questionnaire was not only a description of activities, but also a way of signalling commitment to an international movement dedicated to enhancing women's safety and well-being. Next steps can build on this commitment, strengthening the international links and increasing the flows of knowledge and understanding of the work being done.

Before moving to this discussion, what are the preliminary results of the survey? The Report is divided into 13 sections as follows:

1. Introduction
2. Methods
3. Focus of work of the organizations
4. Activities
5. Partnerships with local governments
6. Tools
7. Successes
8. Lessons learned
9. Was the activity modeled on existing projects ?
10. Replication of project
11. Plans for expansion
12. Other groups to contact
13. Conclusion

The questionnaire in four languages (English, Spanish, French and Portuguese) and the list of survey respondents are included in the appendices.

The report follows the organization of the database and questionnaire. However, we have also regrouped some answers since very often people responding to the questionnaire reacted differently to different questions. Similar answers were often given to different questions.

We hope that this draft report will stimulate discussion and debate about how best to continue and enhance work around the safety and well being of the full diversity of women and girls.

2. METHODS

To collect information on practices and tools across the world, the survey questionnaire (see Appendix 1) was developed with input from the UN-Habitat, the Huairou Commission, Women in Cities International and the Latin American Woman and Habitat Network- HIC. This survey was distributed in four languages (Spanish, English, French and Portuguese) to a very wide target population composed of non-governmental organisations, local and national governments, academic institutions, community-based organisations and grassroots women groups. The distribution strategy included:

Draft - International Women's Safety Survey - Preliminary Results

- Sending the questionnaire via email by main project partners (Huairou Commission, Latin American Woman and Habitat Network- HIC and Women in Cities International). This strategy was used in order to create a snowball effect. Emails were sent to multiple organisations who in turn forwarded the message to their networks and so forth.
- Collaborating with reference points: the Latin American Woman and Habitat Network's coordinating organization, CISCOSA, contracted the assistance and collaboration of 3 of its Network Reference Points for the distribution of the Women's Safety Assessment. Each of these organizations are: CISCOSA (Argentina), AVP - Asoc. Vivienda Popular (Colombia), SUR - Corporación de Estudios Sociales y Educación (Chile) and Fundación Guatemala (Guatemala).
- Posting the information on relevant websites in different languages (English, French, Spanish and Portuguese):
  - o Huairou Commission : www.huairou.org
  - o Women In Cities International: www.womenincities.org
  - o Latin American Woman and Habitat Network- HIC www.redmujer.org.ar
  - o The Canadian Women's Information Centre: www.womennet.ca
- Conducting face-to-face and telephone interviews:
  - o AVP - Asoc. Vivienda Popular (Colombia)
  - o SUR - Corporación de Estudios Sociales y Educación (Chile)
- Distributing questionnaires during special events:
  - o The Latin American Grassroots Academy, held in Lima, Peru. The Academy hosted 90 participants representing over 25 grassroots organizations.
- Disseminating publicity through list-servs and email bulletins:
  - o Huairou Update
  - o Intercambio Huairou
  - o Women in Cities International Network
  - o Women and Safer Cities Listserv
  - o EF-L Études féministes (Gender studies)

  - o INSTRAW (to be confirmed)

Draft - International Women's Safety Survey - Preliminary Results

The questionnaire was sent out on July 19th 2007 and respondents had approximately three weeks to fill out the questionnaire and return it to project leaders. The deadline for receiving the questionnaire during this first phase was set for August 10th but surveys kept trickling in on a regular basis, and were nonetheless included in this analysis. A total of 163 organisations responded to the survey, which was greater than anticipated considering the time constraints.

The responses were also encouraging in terms of geographic and linguistic distribution. Replies came from across the world (Table 1). The majority of surveys we received were from Africa, Central and South America, representing approximately 70%. Other regions were under-represented (Caribbean, Australia, Eurasia, Europe and North America) and will need to be targeted for future phases.

Draft - International Women's Safety Survey - Preliminary Results

Replies also came back in four languages - Spanish (78), English (49), French (30), and Portuguese (6). This in itself posed challenges - the Latin American Woman and Habitat Network- HIC works primarily in Spanish and has English and Portuguese competence and Women in Cities International works in English and French.

We received surveys from very different organisations, from grassroots women's organisation to local governments, to academic institutions, etc. However, we found that respondents were typically women's organisations and NGO's (or non-profit organisations) (Table 2).

Table 2: Approximate number of surveys received by type of organisations and region

Type of organisation	South America	Central America	Caribbean	North America	Europe	Eurasia / Asia /	Africa	TOTAL
Women's' organisation (grassroots, feminists, women crisis centres, shelters women's network, etc.)	13	8	2	6	3	5	12	49
National and local govern-	8	5			3	1		17

UN-Agency	2							2
Other (cooperatives, net-works, foundations, institute, academic institutions, researchm resource centres, etc.)		8	1	2	2	2	1	16

Despite the time constraints and challenges related to the languages, this response rate represented a huge success in having reached out across the world. The questionnaires reflect the enormous variety of specific activities being undertaken to improve the safety, security and well-being of women around the world.

3. FOCUS OF THE WORK

Although there was not a direct question in the survey on the focus of work, we thought that it would be interesting to determine the focus of the work of organisations who responded to this global assessment. This data was assessed by analysing the complete survey. This section provides an idea of the general focus of the work of respondents.

Draft - International Women's Safety Survey - Preliminary Results

According to the surveys, almost 1/2 of the organisations, from different regions around the world, focus their work on all forms of violence against women. The most common forms of gender-based violence focused on are: family violence (including partner violence) (27%) and sexual violence (rape and sexual abuse) (15%). Other recurrent forms of violence mentioned in the surveys were:

- Femicide and missing women
- Violence and harassment in the workplace and schools
- Discrimination (gender, race, sexual orientation, etc.)
- Gun violence
- Violence in public spaces
- Trafficking and sexual exploitation of women
- Honour crimes and harmful traditional practices: breast ironing, female genital mutilation, etc.

Some surveys indicated that certain organisations focused their work on broader issues pertaining to women, such as gender equity, women's participation in decision-making processes, women's empowerment, women's rights, women's health and education and the economic independence of women.

We also noticed that organisations work on addressing the following commonly mentioned risk factors that can be related to gender-based violence:

- Illiteracy
- Economic inequalities (unemployment of women, women's poverty, women's financial dependence on their partners, etc.)
- Cultural norms and socio-customary practices
- Women's lack of access to safe and affordable homes and property disinheritance
- Lack / ineffectiveness of services and resources to women
- Lack / ineffectiveness of gender-based policies
- Poor urban infrastructures
- Drugs and alcohol abuse (including trafficking of drugs)

4. ACTIVITIES

Two kinds of answers tended to be given in relation to the kinds of activities and initiatives undertaken; those describing a form of activity, in many of the cases following the categories suggested in the questionnaire, and secondly, answers given in terms of the specific content area of the activity.

The activity that was most often mentioned was local dialogue, often specifically described as the Huairou Commission's model of 'local to local dialogues' - 17 questionnaires gave this example. This strategy is used mainly by grassroots women's groups to begin on-going discussions with local governments on different issues related to women in order to ensure that policies and programmes include a gender perspective.

Following this, the most common forms of activity were:

- Workshops, seminars, conferences, forums (and here the variety of subjects was huge - from legal issues to anger management, empowerment, sexual abuse, rape prevention)
- Training sessions, including those training the trainers. The groups receiving the training varied widely, from local women leaders to urban planners, police and medical personnel. However, in most cases, those receiving the training were not identified.
- Legal advice and assistance
- Lobbying
- Advocacy - this differs from lobbying in being directed not only to public officials but more broadly to the population. Examples included the development and diffusion of a national pact on women's safety and security, advocacy on specific issues and more general activities around raising the awareness of the general public and of the media.
- Networking, and again the range of organizations included in the various networks was enormous. Networks ranged across community-based women's groups, service delivery agencies, police, school officials, municipalities, national and/or regional public bodies, urban planners. However, in most cases, the members were not specifically mentioned.
- Capacity building of local community organizations, women's groups and local governments
- Holding events - among the examples given were the International Day to End Violence against Women, the Take Back the Night march, the Women's Safety Awards, a marathon,

- rallies, protests.
- Creation of local women's committees
- Focus groups
- Fund raising
- Providing financial assistance (seed grants, micro credit, etc.)
- Counseling
- Carrying out surveys

In terms of the content of the activity, housing and transition shelters are particularly important areas. Some groups specifically mentioned housing projects and several more answered that they operated transition houses or shelters. The importance of the link between anti-violence activity and the provision of decent and affordable housing for women is amply illustrated in the answers to the questionnaires.

Other areas of activity:

- Cultural activities - among the examples given were film festivals, theatre, songs and therapy
- Participatory budgeting processes
- Pilot project in police station

The questionnaire did not lend itself to long descriptions of the activities and only a very small number of respondents gave any description of the dimensions of the activities, their size, who they reached, what the impact was, etc. It would be necessary to do a follow-up study to know whether the activities had been evaluated in terms of process, output or outcome.

5. PARTNERSHIPS WITH LOCAL GOVERNMENTS

Through this assessment, we wanted to explore the role of local governments in the implementation of women's safety initiatives. We asked survey respondents if they work in collaboration with local authorities or other government structures on women's safety, and to describe the type of partnership. A little more than half of the organisations (56%) who filled out the survey stated having worked with government structures. Fifty-six (56) organisations mentioned specifically working with local governments, 10 with regional or provincial governments and 12 with national governments. Furthermore, some respondents stated working with specific government departments such as:

- Women's department (18)
- Police department (14)
- Justice department (8)
- Health department (7)
- Social and community services department (5)
- Community safety department (5)
- Education department (5)

However, the nature of the collaboration was not always obvious. When the information was available, the following types of collaboration with governments were mentioned:

- Government(s) representation in meetings, networks, coalition, councils or observatories on violence
- Engagement of local governments through the implementation of local to local dialogues
- Presentation of research results, proposals or recommendations to relevant authorities
- Training and information provided to local authorities and governments
- Lobbying local authorities on issues related to gender-based violence and gender equality
- Working with local authorities on urban planning for safer communities (i.e. provide street lights, demolish abandoned buildings, etc.)
- Signing of political agreements with local authorities
- Working with local authorities on developing and creating crime prevention plans and/or public policies on women's safety
- Receiving funding from different levels of government

Very seldom did we find that governments were involved in every stage of the projects. We found one agency, UCOBAC in Uganda, which states that local authorities and district leaders are involved in all phases of the project, from project design to the end of the project. Apparently, local authorities have a big role in the identification and selection of project beneficiaries and participate in every activity in the implementation phase. They also take part in the supervision and monitoring of the project.

It is also important to acknowledge that some surveys were submitted by governments (mostly from Central and South America) and therefore women's safety initiatives are led by these government agencies. Here is a list of government structures which submitted initiatives for this global assessment:

➤ Local governments

- Municipal Office of Apopa (Alcaldía Municipal de Apopa) - El Salvador
- Municipal Women's Office. Department of Social Development (Oficina Municipal de la Mujer, Dirección de Desarrollo Social) - Guatemala

6. TOOLS

In this section, we have defined 'tools' as being tangible products - what are sometimes referred to as 'deliverables'. We therefore describe here the kinds of tangible products that the questionnaires mention. As we have described in the Introduction, respondents answered the questions in very different ways and in many cases things that were described in the question on tools have been discussed as activities. We have classified the tools into 5 categories:

- Safety audits and safety planning tools
- Tool kits, guides, manuals
- Public education tools
- Research publications
- Protocols

a) Safety audits and safety planning tools

This was the single specific tool most often mentioned. Twenty-one questionnaires mentioned the use of a safety audit, a tool first developed by METRAC in Toronto, Canada and used around the world. The safety audit tool takes a variety of forms around a basic list of physical and social aspects to be examined in a given space, and a written guide to facilitate the process of the safety audit. The audit is usually conducted by a group, using the list, and identifying aspects of a public or semi-private space that seem unsafe to those who use that space and who are conducting the audit. Allied to this tool were other kinds of products related to safety planning - guides for doing safety planning, the production of maps, including 'insecurity maps' and maps of 'forbidden cities'.

A large variety of safety audit tools exist, adapting the safety audit process to different spaces (rural, urban, suburban), different clienteles (elderly women, immigrant women) and different sectors (public transit, housing, schools, parks).

b) Tool kits, guides, manuals

There were a very substantial number of questionnaires that described tool kits, guides and manuals. In a number of cases, the description was general, simply indicating tool kits. But in other cases, the content of the publication was indicated and this illustrated the very broad number of areas in which guides had been produced. To illustrate this variety, guides were described in the following areas:

- Training manuals on rape prevention
- Guides on agenda building
- Manual - tools for the promotion of safe cities from a gender perspective
- Toolkit for negotiating women's demands
- Manuals for domestic violence intervention
- Social investigation guide
- Train the trainers manual/tool kit
- Took kit on participatory budgets
- Guide to creating partnerships between community-based women's groups and municipal governments
- Process manual for victims of violence

Not surprisingly, given the format of the questionnaire, very few people gave details on the number of guides produced, their distribution and/or the use of the tool kits and guides. This may be because this kind of information is not tracked by the organizations or it may simply be the lack of space in the questionnaire.

c) Public education tools

We have included in this section only tangible products used in public education activities. A huge number of those who answered the questionnaire indicated that they had carried out public education activities and there are a wide range of 'products' that have been developed to support public education activities. These include:

- Posters
- Magazines
- TV talk show
- TV and radio sketches
- Radio broadcasts
- Films, advertising film

- Videos, DVD's
- Web sites
- Brochures, pamphlets, information bulletins
- T-shirts, badges
- On-line video games
- Articles in newspapers.

The use made of modern electronic technologies in the public education tools varies considerably, from traditional products such as posters and articles in newspapers to examples such as on-line video games and interactive web based guides.

d) Research publications

There were a number of groups who indicated that they had done studies or collected statistics. In this section, we are only looking at concrete examples of the tangible production and distribution of research materials, of products building on an evidence base. Examples were given of surveys that had been published, of the publication of gender disaggregated data, or databases created and made available, of the publication of good practices, of books published in order to develop and articulate feminist perspectives. These are different from public education tools, as they are not usually intended for the general public, but rather to develop a strong evidence base and often directed to more specific audiences.

e) Protocols

The final category of tools that was mentioned in the questionnaire are protocols. These were mentioned several times and generally brought together police, social service delivery agencies and health services to produce clear and agreed upon procedures for dealing with women who have had experiences with violence. This is included as a tool as it goes beyond simple discussion or networking to come to the tangible production of a written procedure, and a process whereby groups adhere to the procedure.

7. SUCCESSES

In many cases, those who answered the questionnaires gave examples, either of activities or tools that they felt had been successful. The criteria for judging something a success were most often stated as a heightened awareness of the issue in the society and/or in specific communities. There were various articulations of this:

Draft - International Women's Safety Survey - Preliminary Results

- Women participating in different spaces
- The positioning of issues relating to violence against women in new spaces
- Creating spaces for reflection
- Incorporation of the topic in the public agenda
- Making the issue visible
- Raising awareness
- Gaining greater commitment of authorities.

In other cases, the criteria for success were articulated more in individual terms:

- Changes in behaviour
- Women having greater awareness of their rights
- Greater self-esteem.

In addition, there were some interesting individual answers:

- Activities increased the credibility of the organization
- The creating of a multiservice center
- The use of cultural activities to raise awareness and increase women's participation
- Using multistakeholder models
- Building partnerships and alliances
- Forming a group of local women leaders
- Creating organized activities
- Bringing about legislation changes
- Creating local mechanisms for women's participation.

In general, therefore, activities and/or tools are seen to have been effective when it is felt that the issue of violence against women has achieved greater visibility, been recognized in new places, achieved support from new social actors, and/or been recognized as being on the public agenda. For other respondents, the criteria for judging success would be found in changes to individual women - they would have a greater awareness of their rights, have greater self esteem and therefore would change their behaviour.

8. LESSONS LEARNED

The answers given to the question about the lessons that had been learned were particularly interesting. The groups and individuals who answered the questionnaire had obviously given considerable thought to what they had learned from their activities, the limitations they had discovered, as well as the potential for social change. One can categorize the most frequent responses into four categories:

- Reflections on the importance of, and the difficulties involved in, raising society's awareness of the seriousness of the question of violence against women and girls
- Celebration of the potential for social transformation through women's collective action
- Concerns around funding and the lack thereof
- Concerns around the sustainability of initiatives and the limited capacity for implementation on an on-going basis.

It is important to look at each of these in somewhat greater detail.

a) The importance, and difficulty, of raising awareness.

For some respondents, the lesson learned was the crucial importance of overcoming the resistance to taking the issue of violence against women seriously. Some questionnaires were optimistic (in the sense of feeling that their activities had had an impact) while others insisted more on the strength of the resistance. Some answers underlined the lack of knowledge that women had of the law and of their rights while others framed their answer more in terms of having learned that social change was a long term process. Many pointed to the weight of traditional values, to the lesser importance given to women and therefore to the effort required to transform the situation. The importance of the media was focused upon by some respondents.

b) Celebration of women's potential through collective action.

These answers often stemmed from an analysis similar to that in the previous section, but diverging in focusing on the potential for change through the recognition of the strength of solidarity and collective action. These respondents felt that their activities had demonstrated the power of collective action and the innovative capacity of women. Others felt that the lesson they had learned was the central importance of women's active participation in the activities designed to raise consciousness. This was expressed in other answers as the importance of including women's voice and that the success of activities depended on creating conditions for women's voices to be heard.

c) Concerns about funding

The lack of adequate funding was one of the major lessons that emerged from the questionnaires. Initiatives were reduced, or eliminated or inadequately developed because of funding limitations. Two questionnaires specifically mentioned that their activities were limited because funders were not interested in the area of anti-violence work that the group was involved in.

d) Sustainability and implementation capacity

These answers were linked in part to those related to the inadequacy of funding but they focused more on the consequences of the inability to sustain long term activity. This was sometimes directly expressed in terms of the lack of funding and sometimes expressed more as a question of the capacity for effective implementation. Capacity building was seen to be the primary lesson for some, increased political will to implement anti-violence activity by others. The mobilization of the community was seen as a critical factor for some, building partnerships and finding common ground among the partners was also indicated as of central importance to mobilizing the community. Another answer was in terms of the importance of good relationships and of maintaining on-going links with partners. Once again, the optimistic and pessimistic lessons were both present; the capacity to implement activities successfully is balanced by the weight of limited finances and of limited political will.

In addition to these four clusters of answers, there were some other interesting lessons, expressed by individual respondents:

- Lessons around the problems of getting adequate data and of the importance of an evidence base
- The importance of incorporating anti-violence concerns into urban planning
- The importance of articulating a gender perspective around issues that had not traditionally been seen in this light

The lessons learned fit into a coherent pattern. It is important, and difficult, to raise awareness around the issue of violence against women and girls. There are factors that facilitate greater awareness - the potential of empowered women acting collectively, good networking and effective capacity building. There are also important factors that make these efforts extremely difficult - inadequate funding, difficulty in sustaining activity and weak capacity to implement effectively.

9. WAS THE ACTIVITY MODELED ON EXISTING PROJECTS?

Ideas for the development of projects can arise from knowledge of other existing initiatives. This was clearly true for the 35% of the survey respondents who reported that their project was inspired by another local, regional or, in some cases, international initiative. Although these organisations drew their inspiration from other initiatives, the projects' designs were not replicas but rather an attempt to adapt ideas from other projects to their own needs and realities (i.e. the Connect Network in South Africa were influenced by the Viva Network, a global network for children, but adapted their networking ideas to women).

Some local initiatives use a global approach developed by their mother organisations (i.e. Amnesty International Ivory Coast Section uses the strategies from Amnesty International worldwide and the YWCA Montreal have similar projects to other YWCAs across Canada). Certain projects were also developed within the framework of United Nations programmes, more commonly regional UNIFEM programmes. Some of these groups highlighted that they, nevertheless, develop other initiatives that are innovative and that originate from the local experience.

Partnerships also play a crucial role in inspiring the development and adaptation of initiatives. Groups that are part of global networks highlight that they were inspired from the successes of others partners from other parts of the world. The networks that were mainly mentioned by more than one respondent were Groots, Huairou Commission, Mother Centres International Network for Empowerment (MINE), IANSA, METRAC and Women in Cities International (by participating at the 1st International Seminar on Women's Safety 'Making the Links' in Montreal in 2002).

The majority of organisations who responded not having been inspired by other projects (n=42), indicated that their initiatives originated from the 'on the ground' experiences of women in their communities. Projects were based on local problems and created to respond to the needs of the community.

10. REPLICATION OF PROJECTS

Through this global assessment, we also wanted to identify projects that were replicated elsewhere. This question was answered by a very few organisations. It was found that 24 projects were replicated elsewhere in the same region or country. However, we do not have any detailed information on how these initiatives were replicated.

One project worth highlighting is the METRAC Safety Audit Process which has been replicated worldwide (India, Tanzania, Canada, Australia, South Africa, Great Britain, Russia, Holland and Ireland). Adapted nationally and internationally, it is internationally renowned as a best practice tool and was translated into several languages.

11. PLANS FOR EXPANSION (OR SCALING-UP)

When asked if organisations had any plans for expansion or for scaling-up their work on women's safety, the majority of organisation responded positively (approximately 70%). Some organisations had a clear and concrete action plan for expansion with new activities and services for the future (i.e. opening of a training centre for women, creating gender sensitive programmes, develop educational tools, etc. ....) while others proposed to conduct studies or evaluations to better define the areas that needed further development. Among others, some organisations were waiting for the results of their studies/evaluation in order to move forward with their ideas.

Funding is yet an essential issue regarding the expansion of projects. In fact, organisations with ideas for expansion highlighted that its execution was solely contingent upon access to financial resources. Despite that, the nature of expansion ideas varied among the different respondents:

- Expansion possibilities for certain organisations were closely linked to the participation in (or the creation of) regional, national and/or international networks. The need to learn from others experiences and skills and, in turn, adapting them to their own reality was a common interest among survey respondents. Information exchange on good practices and strategies is seen as a crucial factor for expansion and progression. Some groups clearly stated wanting support and guidance from other projects in other countries to help them further develop their initiative and improve their tools.
- A number of organisations are considering a geographical expansion by replicating their local initiative in other neighbouring communities and municipalities. Several city-wide projects, for example, would like to expand and adapt their local project to rural areas in their region. There were also groups who plan on carrying out their projects on a regional and, in a few cases, on a national basis.
- Partnerships are also a key element to the expansion of projects for certain groups. The involvement of new partners (i.e. local government, businesses, health service providers, etc.) would further strengthen the scope, reach and credibility of their initiatives. This also included getting the wider community involved. Other respondents felt that consolidating their current partnerships would also facilitate the advancement of current projects.
- The idea of expansion for some organisations involved adapting or making available their projects to different target groups (i.e. school children, older women, sex workers, marginalised women, businesses, lesbian and bisexual women, etc.).
- Some organisations focusing on specific working areas such as family violence or violence in public/private spaces would like to expand their work areas to focus more broadly on violence against women.

Groups who responded not having any plans (13%) for expansion did not specifically state the reasons. Those who did respond primarily mentioned that they were unable to expand due to lack of funding and lack of human resources. Only one group stated wanting to intentionally keep their project on a small scale in order to pay full attention and invest all their time to the targeted group.

12. OTHER GROUPS

This global assessment on women's safety is a work in progress. Therefore, we asked respondents if they knew of other organizations or networks working on women's safety promotion and violence prevention and to provide us with their contact information. Many of respondents recommended other groups to contact of which 75 have included their contact information.

13. CONCLUSION

What are the principal conclusions of the survey?

- The huge number of organizations working all around the globe on the issue of violence against women, as those who replied to the questionnaire are less than the tip of the iceberg in terms of the overall number of groups.
- The extremely wide range of activities, perspectives, tools and sectors, despite the general inadequacy of the funding and the often discontinuous nature of financial support and therefore program activity.
- The strongly expressed desire of many groups to expand their activities, indicating their commitment to the issue and their belief in the positive impact of their activity.
- The very widely accepted view of the central importance of raising societal awareness around the issue of violence against women and the equally accepted understanding of the difficulty of this task.
- The existing sharing of practices could be vastly enhanced by stronger links across regions, across language groups and across sectors.

All these conclusions suggest the importance of thinking about next steps. As was suggested in the Introduction, the very existence of the survey has already strengthened links and strengthened the sense of shared goals and shared values.

Draft - International Women's Safety Survey - Preliminary Results

Those respondents who have already replied to the questionnaire represent a potential addition to the networks of UN Habitat Safer Cities and contacts to be used in strengthening the focus on women within UN Habitat. This could be done by choosing to produce informational tools on a limited number of widely used concrete activities, as based on the survey results. For example, it would be possible to develop tool kits on best practices in the area of global anti-violence community-based activities. The survey results highlighted the prevalence of safety audits and local to local dialogues. It would be possible to illustrate best practices, including evaluation techniques, of these two forms of activity and produce tool kits that could be available across regions, across language groups and across sectors. These tool kits would combine research done on these activities, evaluations that exist, implementation strategies and practical suggestions for achieving successful results.

The survey results also suggest the need for capacity-building and a wider variety of training and technical assistance and support to women's organisations which can be organised on a regional basis. There is clearly also considerable scope for UN-Habitat to strengthen and expand the networks between organisations on the ground.

At the same time, some further work could be done on the database. The groups named by each respondent as possible contacts could be contacted and, in addition, certain geographic areas could be focused upon. For example, the replies from Asia were very limited and this may be partly related to language. Perhaps a follow-up project could augment the number of replies from that region. These additions to the database could be done before producing and publishing a final report..

These two suggestions for focused follow-ups on the database to increase the number of replies are also a suggestion not to pursue the goal of trying to create a complete database. There are too many local groups to try to be exhaustive (it would be out of date before being completed) - it is preferable to think of the Database as groups to interact with, and as a potential network whose capacity for collective action could be enhanced by the production and distribution of information tools.

The Draft Report invites debate on next steps. It also celebrates the partnership of UN Habitat Safer Cities, the Huairou Commission, Latin American Woman and Habitat Network -HIC, Women in Cities International, and very specially, all those groups and organizations that took the time to answer the questionnaire. It is your work, your passion and your commitment to the creation of safer and more inclusive communities for the full diversity of women and girls that gives sense to this Draft Report.

International Base-line Survey on Women's Safety

As the first step in the development of a Global Campaign on Women's Safety, the Huairou Commission has been commissioned by the UN-Habitat Safer Cities Program to conduct a global assessment of the on-going work and successful practices organizations and institutions, both governmental and non-governmental, have developed responding to lack of safety and security for women in their communities. The assessment is led by member networks of the Huairou Commission, Women in Cities International and the Latin American Women and Habitat Network, and results will be shared at the International Conference on the State of Safety in World Cities 2007 in Monterrey, Mexico from October 1st – 5th, 2007 (for more information click here to visit the: Monterrey Conference Website)

We invite you to join in the development of a database and directory through completing the survey below. This will enable us to begin the process of network building and knowledge exchange in this important area for women. All submissions are due by Friday, August 10th. Reply to survey@femmesetvilles.org or fax to 514-288-8763 (in Canada) or 718-388-8915 (in U.S.A.).

Nouvelle enquête internationale sur la sécurité des femmes – pour établir une base d'information

Comme première étape dans l'élaboration d'une campagne globale sur la sûreté des femmes, la Commission Huairou a été mandatée par le Programme de l'ONU Habitat pour des Villes plus sûres afin de faire une évaluation globale du travail et des bonnes pratiques mises sur pied par les organisations et les institutions gouvernementales et non-gouvernementales pour combler le manque de sécurité des femmes dans leur communauté. L'évaluation est menée par des réseaux membres de la Commission Huairou, Femmes et villes international et ONU-Habitat-LAC. Les résultats seront partagés lors de la Conférence internationale de 2007 sur l'état de la sécurité dans les villes mondiales qui se tiendra à Monterrey, au Mexique, du 1er au 5 octobre 2007 (pour de plus amples renseignements, veuillez cliquer ici pour accéder au site de la conférence de Monterrey).

On vous invite à participer au développement d'une base de données internationale et d'un répertoire sur les pratiques dans le domaine de la sécurité des femmes. Votre participation nous permettra de commencer un processus de réseautage et d'échanges de connaissances sur cette question si vitale pour les femmes.

Nous vous demandons de remplir et de nous envoyer le questionnaire ci-joint avant le vendredi 10 août : sondage@femmesetvilles.org ou télécopieur 514-288-8763 (au Canada) or 718-388-8915 (au États-Unis.). Veuillez faire parvenir cette information à toutes les autres organisations et/ou institutions que vous connaissez qui travaillent sur les enjeux de la sécurité des femmes.
