CHAPTER II

Principles of Criminal Responsibility

Individuality of Criminal Responsibility

Article 20

- (1) Criminal responsibility is personal. No one shall be deemed culpable for the conduct of another.
- (2) Penalties shall not be imposed on legal entities. However, security measures prescribed by law to be applied to such in respect of a criminal offence shall be reserved.

Intent

Article 21

- (1) The existence of a criminal offence depends upon the presence of intent. Intent is defined as knowingly and willingly conducting the elements in the legal definition of an offence.
- (2) There is probable intent when the individual conducts an act while foreseeing that the elements in the legal definition of an offence may occur. Accordingly, for offences that require a penalty of aggravated life imprisonment, life imprisonment shall be imposed; for those offences that require a penalty of life imprisonment, a term of twenty to twenty-five years of imprisonment shall be imposed; otherwise the penalty shall be reduced by one-third to one-half.

Recklessness

Article 22

- (1) Acts conducted with recklessness shall be subject to a penalty only where explicitly prescribed by law.

- (2) Unconscious recklessness is defined as conducting an act without foreseeing the results as stated in the legal definition of the offence, due to a failure to discharge a duty of care and attention.
- (3) An act is conducted with conscious recklessness when the result is foreseen but is not desired; in this case the penalty for the reckless offence shall be increased by one-third to one-half.
- (4) The penalty to be imposed for an offence committed with recklessness shall be determined according to the offender's fault.
- (5) In offences committed with recklessness, if there is more than one offender, each individual shall be culpable for his own fault. The penalty for each of the offenders shall be determined separately, according to their own fault.
- (6) A penalty shall not be imposed if, as the result of a reckless act, the offender becomes a victim to such a degree (by reference to his personal and family circumstances only) that imposing a penalty becomes unnecessary. Where the offence is committed with conscious recklessness then penalty to be imposed may be reduced by one-sixth to one-half.

The Aggravation of an Offence Due to its Consequences

Article 23

- (1) Where an act causes a more serious result, or result other than intended, a person will not be culpable unless he has acted, at least, with recklessness in regard to such act.

However, security measures shall be imposed for such persons.
- (2) Notwithstanding that it does not reach the extent defined in section one, where a person's ability to control his behaviour in respect of an act he has committed is diminished then a term of imprisonment for a term of twenty-five years where the offence committed requires a penalty of aggravated life imprisonment shall be imposed.
